

...ip for the way we ork Now

You Deserve a Raise
Today. Interest Rates
Don't.

Sexual Harassment and Fluidity

Trump's Impact on Europe

Trump is Right on Economics

Reforms Follow Protests in Ferguson

Facebook
Blot
Tech

The Opinion Pages

On the Ground

NICHOLAS KRISTOF

SEARCH

Father, Apartheid Trailblazer and Domestic Abuser

By THANDI MOKONE-CHASE JULY 30, 2015 12:03 PM 65 Comments

- Email
- Share
- Tweet
- Save
- More

Stephen Mokone in 1960 Photo courtesy Thandi Mokone-Chase

Editor's note: Vida Samuel helped in the writing of this post.

My father, Stephen "Kalamazoo" Mokone, was the first black South African soccer player to play professionally in Europe and to break the color barrier in South Africa during apartheid, which was a remarkable achievement back then. But he was more than that; he

PREVIOUS POST
A Startup for Geeks in Gaza

NEXT POST
Menstruation
Innovation: Lessons from India

ABOUT NICHOLAS KRISTOF

This blog expands on Nicholas Kristof's twice-weekly columns, sharing thoughts that shape the writing but don't always make it into the 800-word text. It's also the place where readers make their voices heard.

More About Nicholas Kristof

was also a violent and abusive man.

Stephen Mokone was incarcerated from 1978 to 1990 in the United States for criminal acts exacted on my mother and her attorney who represented her during their divorce and child custody proceedings. He eventually waived trial and pled guilty to the life-threatening attack on my mother in New Jersey using lye and the hired attack of her attorney, which left her blinded and disfigured from sulfuric acid.

As a famous sports figure, my father had many admirers who overlooked his violent side, or even argued that he had been framed. My father's biographer, Tom Egbers, wrote that my father's conviction was part of a conspiracy involving South Africa's government and U.S. authorities. Egbert was convinced that Stephen Mokone was framed and convicted because he had participated as a young man in anti-apartheid activities. That's just not the case.

Since my father's death March 19 in Washington, D.C., and for the first time in my life, I no longer feel silenced by my fear of him. I've been asked about my desire to "come out" of my silence and "why now?" I am speaking out. His passing has set me free to tell the truth; I can finally own my anger without fear of reprisal. There is very little now that can penetrate the emotional scars I suffered by my father's torment, which included: being physically abused and sexualized; choking my dog in front of me; and hiring an attacker who knocked out my brother's front teeth with the butt of a gun because he became a witness for the prosecution, giving sworn testimony that eventually incriminated our father.

Like many professional athletes in the news today, my father was celebrated for his athletic achievement. There was a national commemoration of his life in South Africa's FNB Stadium, where the 2010 World Cup final was held, after he died. He was lauded as "a national asset" and "a hidden hero."

The violent, criminal acts for which he was responsible were minimized — if even mentioned. His narrative seems a representation of the violent athlete misogynist, similar to other elite athletes such as Floyd Mayweather, Ray Rice and Oscar Pistorius. How can it be that we excuse abusive behavior with statements such as: "With the pressure of divorce and child custody battle...he simply lost his head," or "Good men sometimes do bad things?"

What message does our society send when the NFL gives Tom Brady a harsher measure of discipline for scheming to deflate footballs than initially brought against Ray Rice for physically and brutally attacking his fiancée?

As Stephen Mokone's daughter, I want survivors of these experiences to be acknowledged and included in the global conversation about violence against women. It is particularly disturbing to watch professional athletes glorified by society in life and in death, leaving behind an agonizing legacy for their victims.

ARCHIVE

Select Month

RECENT POSTS

Menstruation Innovation: Lessons from India ■ 18

When it comes to addressing menstrual health and hygiene, much of the ingenuity and innovation has been spearheaded in the developing world, particularly India.Read more...

Father, Apartheid Trailblazer and Domestic Abuser ■ 65

My father Stephen Mokone may have been a great soccer player who broke the color barrier in South Africa during apartheid, but he was no hero in my life.Read more...

A Startup for Geeks in Gaza ■ 9

Gaza Sky Geeks has sparked an unlikely startup movement in Gaza, which has an unemployment rate of 43 percent. Read more...

How to Help Dr. Tom Catena ■ 79

Dr. Tom Catena is an American physician trying to save lives in the Nuba Mountains of Sudan. Here's how you can support him.Read more...

Podcast: Empathy and Opportunity in Baltimore ■ 1

Dontay Burrell, 21, is a former drug dealer who is trying to earn his high school diploma. Read more...

SUNDAY MAGAZINE

D.I.Y. Foreign-Aid Revolution

Why wait for governments or established charities when you can start an NGO in your basement?

• Slide Show

PHOTOS

A Woman's World

Readers submitted photographs to the Magazine that illustrate

AUDIO SLIDE SHOW

A Powerful Truth

Nicholas Kristof talked to the Magazine about how educating

Thandi Mokone-Chase

I also want to explain that domestic violence leaves victims, especially female victims of domestic violence, without recourse and resources – scorned by family members and friends. If the partner with the resources assumes a dictatorial role, she is left without means of immediate survival. That difficulty is magnified when the victim is judged in a court of public opinion made up of rabid fans. And when children are impacted, victims are likely to take a cautious approach to news accounts and public requests for corroboration or denial of these events. My mother's only concern was to protect me and ensure my formative years were lived out without incident or in the shadows of an agonizing legacy. For us, it was not a celebration of an athlete but an observation of a life that once was.

I tell my story now with the goal of furthering this global conversation about domestic violence in general and intimate partner violence in particular against women. We need only think as of 17-year-old Anene Booysen, who was gang raped and murdered in South Africa or Boko Haram and its targeting of schoolgirls to consider how women's lives are commodified. We cannot afford to take a lethargic approach to this conversation.

As I observe the treatment of women by athletes such as Mayweather, Rice and Pistorius, silence is no longer an option for me – it is a signal of complicity. My immediate obligation is to challenge the hero-worship that discounts the lives left traumatized by these icons.

Stephen "Kalamazoo" Mokone was referred to as the "Black Meteor" in the Netherlands and "the Maserati" in Italy. While my father may have been a great soccer player, he was no hero in my life.

Thandi Mokone-Chase is a social worker in Atlanta, Ga. Connect with her at Why Speak Now (@whyspeaknow)

Correction: August 4, 2015

The original post misspelled the surname of the Dutch journalist.

the empowerment of women.

View the Photos →

girls can help fight poverty.

Go the Audio Slide Show →

@NICKKRISTOF ON TWITTER

FOLLOW

He is Tom Egbers, not Egbert.

65
COMMENTS

SHARE

DOMESTIC VIOLENCE, WOMEN, BOKO HARAM, BOOYSEN, ANENE, DOMESTIC VIOLENCE, MAYWEATHER, FLOYD, PISTORIUS, OSCAR, SOCCER, SOUTH AFRICA, WOMEN AND GIRLS, WORLD CUP (SOCCER), WORLD CUP
2010 (SOCCER)

The New York Times

Go to Home Page »

NEWS

World
U.S.
Politics
N.Y.
Business
Tech
Science
Health
Sports
Education
Obituaries
Today's Paper
Corrections

OPINION

Today's Opinion
Op-Ed Columnists
Editorials
Contributing Writers
Op-Ed Contributors
Opinionator
Letters
Sunday Review
Taking Note
Room for Debate
Public Editor
Video: Opinion

ARTS

Today's Arts
Art & Design
ArtsBeat
Books
Dance
Movies
Music
N.Y.C. Events Guide
Television
Theater
Video Games
Video: Arts

LIVING

Automobiles
Crossword
Food
Education
Fashion & Style
Health
Jobs
Magazine
N.Y.C. Events Guide
Real Estate
T Magazine
Travel
Weddings & Celebrations

LISTINGS & MORE

Classifieds
Tools & Services
Times Topics
Public Editor
N.Y.C. Events Guide
TV Listings
Blogs
Cartoons
Multimedia
Photography Video
NYT Store
Times Journeys
Subscribe
Manage My Account

SUBSCRIBE

Times Premier
Home Delivery
Digital Subscriptions
NYT Opinion
Crossword

Email Newsletters
Alerts
Gift Subscriptions
Corporate Subscriptions
Education Rate
Mobile Applications
Replica Edition
International New York Times